

In every mission,
you are there too.

SSCh is a small volunteer association that delivers concrete aid to refugee camps that have spontaneously arisen along the Turkish-Syrian border since 2014.

It is the natural evolution of a humanitarian commitment initiated by Arianna Martini, the founder of the organization. Since 2013, she visits the site monthly with her team to monitor and document the association's support actions for children, orphans, the elderly, and families fleeing the war in Syria.

In this photo album, SSCh showcases its commitment, portraying the poverty, desolation, and resignation of those who have lost everything. But thanks to the support of donors like you, SSCh has managed to plant seeds of hope and redemption.

The smile of the children is the most significant and priceless gratitude that Arianna Martini and her team bring home from every mission. It's a motivation to always do more and better, to courageously and determinedly indicate a future to those who have stopped searching for it.

Heartfelt thanks
from the entire SSCh Team.

"Everything we do happens THANKS to your help and your generosity, without which we could not even dream of realizing our projects for the least among the least."

MISSION

"Bombs and death, fear and tears. Children are the most affected by this madness that is war. It has exterminated, mutilated, starved them, made them orphans, and we have forgotten them. The children I have met, however, still smile."

"Poverty is a complicated issue, but feeding a child is not."
